DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

1. Applicant's arguments files 3/8/2004 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claim 1-8 and 36-62 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over COLLELA ET AL (US 6003006) in view of YUYAMA ET AL (US 5946883).

COLLELA ET AL discloses a system of providing doses of medications. A computer system (10) controls operation at a pill repository (12) where pills are dispensed and packets are filled, and also dosages, schedules, and other information (20, 24) kept at a central facility and accessed via remote communications (22). The computer system includes an interface to enter the claimed information. (See COLLELA ET AL, Fig. 1 and col. 3-4.)

COLLELA ET AL does not disclose filling and labeling the packets for an individual dose according to scheduled dosages.

YUYAMA ET AL discloses a system for dispensing individual doses of medications, packaging those medications into containers according to individual needs / schedules, and labeling the container with individual data, including dosage schedules (See YUYAMA ET AL Fig. 32-33.)

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the invention of COLLELA ET AL to package and label the doses of medicine according to individual requirements, as taught by YUYAMA ET AL, in order to eliminate a third-party middleman between the dispensing and the consumer.

Regarding claim 3 and 43, the individual packets are labeled. (See Fig. 3A.)

Regarding claim 4, 44, and 57, the combination of COLLELA ET AL and YUYAMA ET AL does not disclose the interface as being a website. However, connection between computers via a modem (as disclosed in COLLELA ET AL) and connection between computers via a website are both art-recognized equivalents in the electronic communications art and it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the combination of COLLELA ET AL and YUYAMA ET AL by using a website to allow users to communicate with the computer system in order to allow communication from anywhere with an internet connection.

Regarding claim 7, 41, and 47, the online payment of bills and purchases is well known in the electronic communication art and it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the combination of COLLELA ET AL and YUYAMA ET AL to include online payment for the dispensed and packaged medications in order to make payment more secure and convenient for consumers.

Regarding claim 37 and 52, sorting packages according to date is a well known manual procedure for any type of stock clerking or office management setting and it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to automate this procedure to reduce workload on personnel, since it has been held that broadly providing a mechanical or automatic means to replace manual activity which has accomplished the same result involves only routine skill in the art. In re Venner, 120 USPQ 199.

Regarding claim 54, the use of multiple processors connected in parallel to speed computation and computing is well known in the data processing art and it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to connect as many computers in parallel as necessary to handle the workload for the system at any given product rate.
